ERP and Business Processes Chapter 10

1. The data used in analyzing a firm's value chain is brought together with other data and activities that are suggestive of other patterns, values, or economic activity in the interests of data control.

- a) High level data points with no title
- b) Each point accompanied by supplementary info
- c) Non-quantification of the results
- d) All results with titles, numbers

ANS: D

Rationale:

For value chain analysis, you gather all the data you can to present a rich, complete description of the value chain. This includes not only the data points, but also the high-resolution, detailed information that is available. This is a common operational activity. Finding a pattern suggests that you have found a value chain. A value chain is a series of activities that are performed and necessary to create the value chain. The value chain is the result of the activities that are performed. The value chain is the result of the activities that are performed.

2. While reviewing the value chain, it is useful when comparing two types of value chains: the value chain of a customer and the value chain of a supplier. Which of the following is not likely to be found in the customer's value chain?

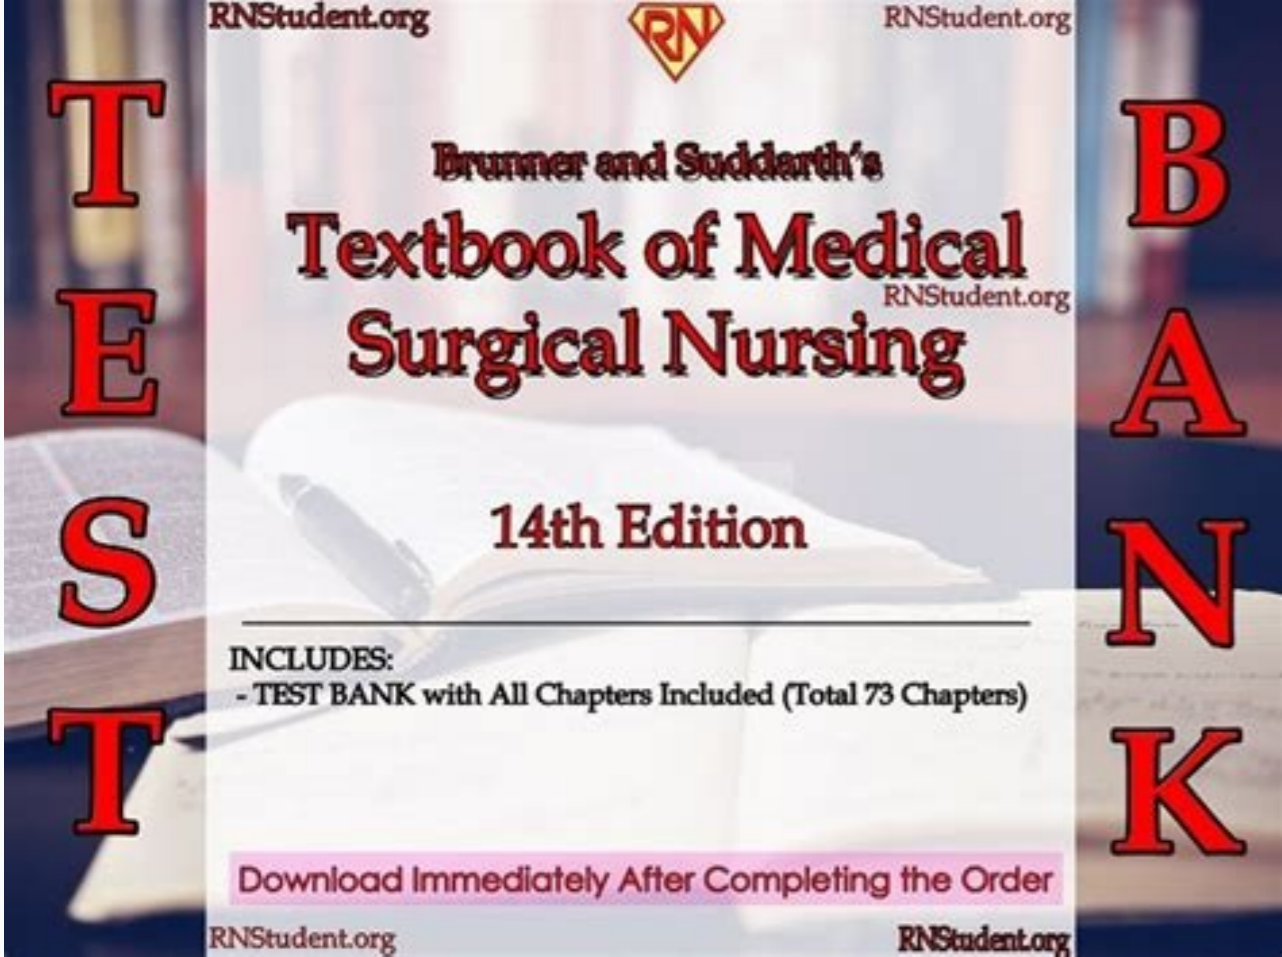

- a) Direct operations of value chain to be controlled by the customer
- b) Supplier's value chain management of key inputs
- c) Supplier's key operational activities
- d) Supplier's production of the product

ANS: B

Rationale:

The value chain of a customer is the management of key inputs. The value chain of a supplier is the production of the product.

My teacher jumps around so having to go through and find out which section is that it will be very time consuming and confusing. The chapters at the end lack rationals and only list answers that are not conducive to the learning of the nursing school. Many problemshow this was copied from somewhere Show more reviews Given the hardest evidence this year, and our early reading on the results of the DFAST, we were notthat banks have gone into trouble for the 2018, or CCar comprehensive capital review and review. Of the 35 banks submitted to the CCAR, 31 companies received no objects. Goldman Sachs, Morgan Stanley, and State Street received a conditional objective, while DB uses corporation (one of the first time participating foreign banks) received an object for qualitative reasons. We also observed that American Express, JPMorgan Chase, KeyCorp and M&T The bank presented all adjusted capital plans before the final results were accounted for, allowing them to meet all regular motive requirements. As we foresee, many companies were forced to be more conservative this year than they may have been otherwise, but in all, the global restrictions imposed by the Feder will not be significant. Morgan Stanley and Goldman Sachs will simply be limited to returning the same amount of total capital as in the last years, and State Street will not be limited to this requested plan, but instead should address certain questions around his exposure Sates to counterparts. The CCAR test is important because it reaffirms the resilience of the large US banks to a severe economic crisis and is restricted to capital returns. Overall, banks have added $ 800 of common capital capital since 2009 and brought their aggregate capital rates of capital capital from 5.2% to 12.3%, which significantly strengthened the bank system of USA. In the future, we design Banks from the US, in motion, will continue to return near or more than 100% of the capital generated and begin to lose excess capital. We see the results of the test as more positive for Wells Fargo and Capital One, as they should be able to repurchase their action in the greatest discounts for our current fair value estimates. We are maintaining our current classifications of and fair value estimates for US banks.
